FIRST ANNOUNCEMENT

MSPPC 2008

19th Malaysian Society of Plant Physiology Conference

SUSTAINABLE CROP AND PLANT PRODUCTIVITY IN RELATION TO CLIMATE CHANGE

18-20 November 2008
Evergreen Laurel Hotel, Penang

Organized by

SCOPE

Global food demand projected for the next 50 years poses huge challenges for the sustainability of food production. New practices for ensuring the sustainability of agriculture will be crucial to meet the current and future demands of improving yields without compromising environmental integrity or public health. Agricultural practices will determine the level of food production and, to a great extent, the state of the global environment.

Evidence grows daily of the changing climate and its impact on plants. Plant function is linked to climate and atmospheric carbon dioxide concentration. On the smallest scales, the climate affects the plant's immediate environment and so directly influences physiological processes. At larger scales, the climate might influence the viability and growth performances of different crops in agricultural production. The greatly increased global food demand and the possible detrimental impacts of climate change on the plant productivity, highlighting the need for more sustainable agricultural methods.

The goal of sustainable agriculture is to maximize the net benefits that society receives from agricultural production. This will require increased crop yields, increased efficiency of nitrogen, phosphorus and water use, ecologically based management practices, judicious use of agrochemicals and reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. Advances in the fundamental understanding of ecophysiology, agroecology, biogeochemistry and biotechnology that are linked to plant production can contribute greatly to sustainability. With a strong congregation of amultitude of professional in the field of plant science, it is hoped that this conference will act as a platform to discuss on the strategies for sustainable plant production and combating challenges posed by climate change.

OBJECTIVES

- ❖ To review the status of R&D in the field of plant physiology relating to plant productivity and climate change
- ❖ To deliberate and share information on the current research findings on agricultural and climate change; and relate their relevance for sustainability in plant production
- ❖ To provide direction for an organized research in the field of plant physiology, and promote inter-disciplinary and inter-agency networking in this respect towards sustainable production systems and plant improvement

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- ❖ Researchers, academicians and students with interest in the study of plant science and climate change;
- ❖ Plantation and forest managers, natural resources stakeholders;
- ❖ Sociologists and economists;
- ❖ Managers, extension officers/workers and national advisory agencies;
- ❖ Funding agencies managers involved in Agro-Industry, Environment and Science & Engineering Sectors and policy makers.

TENTATIVE SCIENTIFIC PROGRAMME

The programme also includes keynote addresses by invited speakers, oral and poster presentations. Presentation from various aspects of plant science will be the highlight of the scientific programme. Best poster presentation will be judged and awarded. Tentative areas of interest, which will be covered during the conference, include scientific sessions on:

- ❖ Effects of Climate Change
- ❖ Plant Growth and Development
- ❖ Ecophysiology and Stress Biology
- ❖ Developmental Physiology and Assimilate Production
- ❖ Postharvest Technology and Quality Control
- ❖ Pest and Disease
- ❖ Crop Production in Controlled Environment
- ❖ Biotechnology
- ❖ Modeling and Simulation
